Located in Northern Bastrop County, the small town of Elgin, Texas, has a small footprint. However, it's positioned fewer than 25 miles from Austin and has benefited greatly from its larger neighbor's meteoric growth.

Founded in 1872, Elgin rapidly established itself as an agricultural center in its home county. Business leaders opened a cotton oil mill and five cotton gins in the early 1900s. Eventually, three different brick manufacturers would open facilities in the area, leading many to call Elgin "The Brick Capital of the Southwest."

Over the years, Elgin has gone through many transformations. Today, it remains a quaint town and memorial to "old Texas." It's a great destination for those who want a break from the hustle and bustle of bigger cities while still maintaining close proximity to cultural hotspots like Austin.

Recently, Elgin's government officials have spearheaded several initiatives to upgrade and modernize the city's parks and recreational facilities. Over the next several years, the town plans to overhaul these assets to deliver more value to residences and attract visitors.

If you like good eats and great barbeque, you'll love Elgin. Meyer's Elgin Smokehouse is known locally as "Cuetopia," and it definitely lives up to the hype. The eatery serves up locally-produced sausage, ribs, smoked meats, and all the fixings. There are several other local favorites and a few familiar chains spread along the town's major corridor.
